MEN WHO HELPED MAKE PORTSMOUTH

Brief Sketches of Their Lives, Which Should Be An Inspiration to All; Opportunities In Portsmouth for the Hard-working Conscientious Young Man Just As Good As Anywhere Else in The World

GEORGE D. SELBY

For more than half a century George D. Selby has watched and aided the building of Portsmouth. Coming here in 1867, he began his business life in Portsmouth by engaging in the sewing machine business as agent for The Singer Manufacturing Company, traveling by horse-drawn vehicles throughout Ohio and adjoining countries.

"We had no home at that time," said Mr. Selby. "Like the country school teacher, we 'boarded around.'" Industry and thrift have been responsible for the development of the young sewing machine agent into the president of a great industry.

George Dyer Selby traces his ancestry back to Jeremiah Selby, born and educated in England, who came to America in 1712. Jeremiah's descendant, Dyer, the grandfather of George Dyer Selby, came to Ohio with his family in 1819 and lived for a time near the village of Marietta. Hines Cone Selby, father of George Dyer Selby, was a child of four years at that time. George Dyer Selby was born on a farm in Berne township, Athens county, April 1, 1846, and grew to young manhood in the substantial house of hewed logs where the ten children made a merry household. He was educated in the rural schools of the township and worked on his father's farm. During the war between the states Mr. Selby served in Company H of the 168th Ohio Volunteer Infantry until the end of the conflict, when he received his honorable discharge. He then returned home and studied at a private seminary in Athens county, after which he taught school for one term. For fourteen years after coming to Portsmouth he worked as agent for The Singer Manufacturing Co. The same year that he came to Portsmouth, 1867, Mr. Selby was married to Lydia V. Webster of Meigs county, Ohio, and until they had established a home Mrs. Selby accompanied her husband on his drives through the country and proved to be a valuable helper in the conduct of their business. They are the parents of five children, Pearl E., Cora W. (deceased), Mark W., Homer C. and Roger A.

In 1890 Mr. Selby formed a partnership with Irving Drev and Bernard Damon to engage in the manufacture of shoes. In 1902 Mr. Selby bought control and the business was incorporated as The Drev-Selby Co. The venture prospered and in 1906 Mr. Selby bought the remaining interests of the former partnership and the corporate name was changed to The Selby Shoe Co., with George D. Selby, President and General Superintendent, Mark W. Selby, Vice President and Secretary, and J. J. Rardin, Treasurer. The Selby Shoe Co. products are known all over the United States and in a number of foreign countries. The success of this business has been a vital factor in bringing other industries to Portsmouth, and has contributed in a marked degree to the city's development.

Mr. Selby is also president of The Security Bank, a member of the Board of Trade, and later a member of the Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Selby has always been an active member and worker in Bigelow Methodist Episcopal Church. He is also a Knight Templar, a 32d degree Scottish Rite Mason, and a member of The Ancient Arabic Order Nobles of The Mystic Shrine. His York Rite memberships are all in the Masonic Bodies of this city, while his Scottish Rite and Shrine affiliations are at Cincinnati.

Mr. Selby was a charter member of Bailey Post No. 164 Grand Army of the Republic, and has continued an active member thereof. He is also a charter member of the Country Club and a member of the Kiwanis Club.

"If I were giving advice to a young man just starting in business," said Mr. Selby, "I would say: 'Work! Spend less money than you earn, and practice efficiency and economy.'"

Eternal Rest Comes To Noble Character In Prayerful Quiet of Sunday

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—Tentative plans for the funeral of former President Wilson as announced today by Dr. Grayson, provide for a brief private service at the S Street residence at 5 p. m. on Wednesday.

This service will be followed by another at 3:30 at Bethlehem Chapel in the Cathedral at Mount St. Albans, where the body will be placed in a vault until arrangements for the final resting place.

It was decided not to hold a state funeral, as proposed by some, or to have the body lie in state at the capitol.

The funeral services will be conducted both at the home and at the chapel by the Rev. James H. Taylor, pastor of the Central Presbyterian Church which Mr. Wilson attended; the Rev. Sylvester Beach, of Princeton, N. J., who was Mr. Wilson's pastor there, and Bishop Freeman of Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—Woodrow Wilson has found in eternity a haven from the storms and sorrows of a troubled world.

In the prayerful quiet of a Sunday morning, death folded him gently in its embrace and bore him to his Maker.

He passed from life while he slept, with those he loved best close about him. His body had weakened little by little, until the last spark of his vitality went out. But his spirit was sustained to the last by the indomitable courage of the old fighting days. In his last waking moments he told his loved ones that he knew the end had come and was ready.

Mr. Wilson died at 11:15 o'clock Sunday morning.

The remote cause of death lies in his ill health, which began more than four years ago, namely, general arterio-sclerosis with haemiplegia.

"The immediate cause of death was exhaustion following a digestive disturbance which began in the early part of last week, but did not reach an acute stage until the early morning hours of February 1."

The federal government already has announced plans to erect a national monument to the memory of the late President Wilson.

President Outlines Steps To Aid Wheat Farmers

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—President Coolidge in an address prepared for the opening today of the special conference on northwest agriculture, outlined definite proposals for government assistance of wheat farmers.

Direct extension of federal funds, as proposed in the pending Norbeck-Burns bill to finance wheat growers in attempting diversification of their crops and continuance of advances through the war finance corporation to cooperative enterprises and financial institutions in the farming regions were the methods suggested.

Without co-operation between state, local and federal governments he warned, help could not be made effective. Likewise, he added, creditors of northwestern farming communities must take concerted action for the refunding and extension of existing indebtedness to make the federal aid effective. The conference, which is being attended by representatives of industry, finance and transportation as agriculture, included many leaders, he said, who could work out the program necessary.

To Provide For Appropriation

The president, outlining the steps "which in my opinion the federal government can properly take in co-operation with you, as its share of the work to be done," said:

"First, enactment of the Norbeck-Burns bill providing an appropriation to be administered by the secretary of agriculture and two additional commissioners for the purpose of promoting diversification of agriculture in certain sections of the country which heretofore have been devoted primarily to the production of wheat.

"Such a fund can be used to make loans to wheat farmers to enable them to purchase livestock and poultry, and thus equip their farms for dairying and general farming. It should not be loaned to men who have not the ten-

SEVERE STORM SWEEPS STATES

CHICAGO, February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—The worst storm of the winter from many angles swept the country from Minnesota to Texas today. With its center in Missouri, sleet and wind played havoc with communications and colder weather set in in the northwest. Many cities and towns were isolated by heavy blizzards.

The high wind, according to weather bureau reports, did almost as much damage as sleet and reached a velocity of 43 miles an hour in Chicago and ranged from 30 to 40 miles an hour over much of the other territory affected, which includes Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota, Iowa, Illinois, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri and southwestward into Texas.

The storm developed in the west last Saturday and has assumed widespread proportions in the middle Mississippi Valley although the situation is clear up today in western Nebraska. While precipitation has been widespread, three inches of snow have fallen in the western and northern portions of the affected district, with snow and sleet and rain shifting winds in other parts.

All telegraph wires failed between Chicago and Milwaukee, and in northern Wisconsin a large strip of territory was isolated. Telegraph wires out of Chicago had no connection with Des Moines, Iowa and points west until late in the evening when communication with Omaha, Neb., was established. The Rocky Mountain area although still not affected severely by the storm conditions and the far west, were out of communication with Chicago and the midwest.

The colder weather in the northwest is due to a cold wave pushing southward from Canada, but it is of limited proportions, according to weather reports. Another cold wave has been sighted in Alaska, but it is several days distant from the United States and too far away for weather forecasters to predict what its effect may be.

ATHENS, February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—By the verdict of four physicians who examined him today Premier Venizelos will have to give up his post at the head of the Greek government and obtain from all his wanted activities for an indefinite period.

It was announced that he would submit his resignation before the day was over.

B. Anderson, on an indictment charging him with conspiracy to use the mails to defraud, and the use of the mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud. Trial date will be set later. He was indicted with eighteen others in connection with the investigation of the Hawkins Mortgage Company and its subsidiaries.

Huntington Man Kills Wife, Shoots Self; Jealousy Given As Motive

HUNTINGTON, W. VA., Feb. 4.—Jealousy in the belief of his wife's alleged infidelity, prompted James Leonard, 32 years old, of Huntington, to fire a bullet into his brain, causing instant death Saturday after he had sent two bullets into the body of his twenty-year-old wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Leonard, whose mother is an Ashland woman.

Leonard died before he reached a Huntington hospital and his wife lies in the Huntington General Hospital in a critical condition suffering with two bullet wounds, one in the shoulder and another in the back. Physicians at the hospital stated last night that Mrs. Leonard had a small chance to recover. The principals of yesterday's shooting were former residents of Ashland.

Haverhill Deal Is Being Revived

The Ironton Register says: The deal involving the property below Haverhill that was near consummation a few months ago, has seemingly died of innocuous desuetude, but it is understood that there is a likelihood that the proposition will be revived within a reasonable time and that the company that was figuring strongly in the negotiations, will consummate them.

While there was some disagreement over terms of purchase, it is understood that the chief reason for the abandonment of the project for the time being was the economic condition generally and that the project is subject to revival at almost any time now. Anyhow, it will be pleasant news to learn that there has not been a complete abandonment of the idea.

The company that was taking the options was an electric company at Pittsburg and Philadelphia and it had great plans for expansion and enlargement that included a vast tract of land for a model city and immense manufacturing plant.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—Woodrow Wilson's personality was in many respects the most unusual that ever inhabited the White House. It commanded from millions administration approaching veneration; it aroused in others aversions amounting to hatred.

Mr. Wilson himself, acknowledged that he had "a single track mind." Friends acknowledged he was reserved, critics said he was cold. His few intimates declared he was neither and joined in acclaiming one of the most delightful of associates.

Mr. Wilson's seclusion and scarcity of intimates were among his outstanding characteristics. It was said of him, by those who ought to know, that he called only two men of his wide acquaintance by their first names. They were Cleveland H. Dodge and Cyrus H. McCormick, of the House, of Texas, who was supposed to have been as close to Mr. Wilson as any other man during his incumbency of the White House, never saw a state where Mr. Wilson called him "Ed" or "Edward." Never did Mr. Wilson call him "Colonel," the complimentary title by which Mr. House was most commonly known. Through all their intimacy up to the moment of the celebrated breaking-off point, Mr. Wilson always called him simply "House."

Want to laugh? Then see Reverend Dayton Up-to-Date at Trinity Church Tuesday evening, February 5th, at 7:30.

The play is being repeated by request as many were unable to get in last Tuesday and many want to see it again.

Many expressions from members and outsiders were heard that it was the best home talent play they ever saw and worth more than 25 cents of anyone's money. A good laugh is assured.

Woodrow Wilson's Personality In Many Respects Most Unusual That Ever Inhabited White House

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—Woodrow Wilson's personality was in many respects the most unusual that ever inhabited the White House. It commanded from millions administration approaching veneration; it aroused in others aversions amounting to hatred.

Mr. Wilson himself, acknowledged that he had "a single track mind." Friends acknowledged he was reserved, critics said he was cold. His few intimates declared he was neither and joined in acclaiming one of the most delightful of associates.

Mr. Wilson's seclusion and scarcity of intimates were among his outstanding characteristics. It was said of him, by those who ought to know, that he called only two men of his wide acquaintance by their first names. They were Cleveland H. Dodge and Cyrus H. McCormick, of the House, of Texas, who was supposed to have been as close to Mr. Wilson as any other man during his incumbency of the White House, never saw a state where Mr. Wilson called him "Ed" or "Edward." Never did Mr. Wilson call him "Colonel," the complimentary title by which Mr. House was most commonly known. Through all their intimacy up to the moment of the celebrated breaking-off point, Mr. Wilson always called him simply "House."

supposed to be enjoying the highest favor.

There was a good deal of public exaggeration about Mr. Wilson's penchant for reading detective stories, although he did do some light reading. He took to golf as a health measure at his doctor's orders and learned to like it; he liked light music and the theatre which he regarded as sacred and not to be trespassed upon under any consideration. That was his family life. Nothing aroused him more than public discussions or printed references to the women folk of his household. He insisted upon a most rigid observance of conventionalities.

When he left the White House and moved to a residential district, he continued a life of seclusion in which his only diversions were a motor ride three or four times a week and an occasional visit to a vaudeville show. Occasionally he was invited to luncheon or dinner some man who had been closely associated with him in his administration during the war period, but he had no more intimates out of the White House than he did while in it, and his wife had very few.

He kept Home Life Intact

The result was that Mr. Wilson moved his family—a wife and three daughters to the White House, he shunned the formal state parlors on the lower floor, leaving them to the tourists and installed himself with his family in the second floor where the Wilsons re-created their old home at Princeton. Family life on that scale continued until the death of the first Mrs. Wilson and the marriage of two of her daughters.

Mr. Wilson paid his first respects to the local aristocracy by declining an invitation to join the Chevy Chase Club, the most exclusive golf, dinner and dancing organization in the city, and went across the Potomac to golf at an obscure "poor man's club." On one of his first rounds over the links, he failed to hear "fore" of a local merchant, who paid his respects in language not usually addressed to a president of the United States. Mr. Wilson threw down his club and walked off the links. He did not return until a committee of the club called with an apology.

It was said that Mr. Wilson's attitude softened a little as time wore on, but there was little opportunity to test the accuracy of that because the country soon was engrossed in the World War, later took an active part, and he soon thereafter was stricken helpless. All social functions were dispensed during that time and the president saw practically nobody. Cabinet meetings were postponed for weeks at a time, there were days when neither cabinet officers nor even his secretary saw him. His personal associates during that time he had none.

Wilson's family and his physician, Dr. Grayson.

ASHLAND, KY., February 4.—On a small white car in the front room of a tiny three-room cottage on a street in the heart of the city, a woman named Mrs. John Lockhart, 30, lay last night, her hip broken in the fall that occurred when a small boy ran into her with his "scooter" as she was plodding her feeble way along the sidewalk in front of her home.

The experience of the industry necessary for successful farming. "Moreover, government aid in this connection must be predicated upon full cooperation, along certain well defined lines of existing creditors of the farmers. It will serve no useful purpose to lend money to a farmer who is in such a position that at any moment mortgage holders and general creditors can fall upon him, sell his lands, and seize his property."

To Be Made On Business Basis
"Second, it is proposed that the time during which the war finance corporation may make advances for agriculture purposes be extended to the end of the present calendar year. The policy has been to make loans where they would be helpful to the agricultural and livestock interests, but to make them on a sound business basis and upon adequate security. This policy must be adhered to in the future. The corporation can not and should not make loans directly to individual farmers nor should it purchase paper without recourse from banks or other financial institutions."

"In my message to congress I stated that there are district limits to the scope of the assistance which the federal government can render. These limits must not be overstepped. It was pointed out that government agencies cannot properly make loans upon insecure collateral or to banking institutions whose capital is seriously impaired."

"There have been severe losses to banking and commercial interests on account of the serious conditions prevailing in the northwestern states. Some of these losses doubtless can be repaired and further losses avoided if the program of action herein outlined is adhered to."

gust themselves to this conference, by which the interests represented can render material and effective assistance in the emergency, either independently or in co-operation or another agency of the government.

"The proposals outlined herein are temporary measures designed to provide prompt relief in any emergency situation and to assist in accomplishing the adjustments which violently fluctuating post war economic conditions make necessary. It is possible, however, to forego the hope that out of this experience there may come for the benefit of future generations an improvement in the management and policies of the financial institutions which serve the agricultural interests. Just as the diversification program is intended to establish a sounder basis for permanent successful farming, so the consolidation of the financial aspects of the present situation should lead to greater efforts to promote wiser, sounder banking."

"These proposals are made to meet certain distressing situations in certain sections. They do not cover all the needs but I believe they will be an effective help. Agriculture and banking like all other interests, are not the business of the government but the business of the people. Primarily they must assume responsibility for them. The government can help, should help and will help but it will be entirely ineffective unless the main impulse comes from the people."

"The principle purpose of this conference is to secure cooperation. Agriculture can not stand alone. The banks can not stand alone. A great amount of money has been spent to establish the population in the area affected. It represents some of the best elements of our citizenship."

political economy at Bryn Mawr and then went to Savannah, Ga., where he married Miss Axson, June 24, 1883.

The Wilsons spent their summers in the south, where their two eldest daughters were born.

In 1893 Wilson became professor of history and political economy at Wesleyan University. While there he published "The State," revealing his knowledge of government problems. In 1896 he went to Princeton as professor of jurisprudence and politics. Wilson was then working on his third book, "The History of the American People," and shorter works. He became president of the university in 1902 and attempted to democratize the institution. He realized it had become a school of rich men's sons. A committee studied the situation and scholarship requirements were raised and clubs abolished. Then the rich alumni and parents of rich students rose up against him. The issue was complicated by the offer of a million fund by an alumnus on condition that certain appointments be made and certain buildings erected. Wilson refused the money, saying that teachers and students, rather than fine buildings, made the college. The trustees accepted the money over Wilson's head, and from then on opposed his democratic reforms.

his democratic reforms. In 1910 Wilson was nominated for governor of New Jersey. He resigned from Princeton and stamped the state, preaching democracy. He was elected by a plurality of 50,000. His method of campaigning brought him before the eyes of the country.

Wilson carried out pre-election promises, forced through the Legislature a direct primaries act, had enacted a corrupt practices election law and a workmen's compensation law.

Early in 1912 a Wilson boom was started to land him in the presidential chair. He traveled from coast to coast in all 8,000 miles—talking clean government and democracy. On the 46th ballot at the Baltimore convention Wilson was nominated.

The Republican party was split by Taft and Roosevelt and Wilson's election to the presidency resulted, on November 4, 1912.

He entered the White House March 4, 1913, succeeding William Howard Taft. The most serious problem confronting him was the Mexican situation.

His policy toward Mexico was one of "watchful" waiting. He forced through the tariff revision, a graduated tax on incomes, and federal reserve bank system which solved the currency problem. Voluntary dissolutions took the place of prosecutions in handling the trusts.

Mrs. Wilson had been in poor health for some time and died August 6, 1914.

The Mexican situation was still at the boiling point when the clash of European nations flared up. Wilson undertook the gigantic task of guiding America through as a neutral.

The Mexican situation caused the president to order mobilization of forces along the border in March, 1915. In the fall of that year his engagement to Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt, of Washington was announced. They were married December 18th of that year.

This was the third Wilson wedding in the White House, the president's two daughters, Jessie and Eleanor, being wedded to Francis Bowes Sayre and William G. Moxham, secretary of the treasury, respectively.

Pershing Enters Mexico. In 1916—election year at hand—the Mexican situation reached a climax with the Villa raids across the border. Wilson sent "Black Jack" Pershing at the head of a punitive expedition into Mexico.

Despite the insults suffered at the hands of Germany, President Wilson still maintained the neutral attitude and the Democratic slogan in the campaign of 1916. "He kept us out of war."

helped him win the presidency again. WILSON—Galt. TWO... Late in his first term of office the German situation became so alarming that President Wilson broke off diplomatic relations with Berlin. He sent Ambassador Von Bernstorff home.

War Is Declared. He went before Congress on April 2, 1917, and asked that the United States declare a state of war existed with Germany. Four days later he signed the measure and in a presidential proclamation declared a state of war existed.

He bent all efforts toward the successful carrying out of this country's war aims. On May 18 Wilson signed the selective service act, the passage of which made possible the raising of the world's greatest army in the shortest space of time and with fairness to all.

Big Men Called In. The White House was closed to visitors. The president was a forceful leader with Congress and Congress passed the huge measure he placed before it. He called to Washington the biggest men of the nation.

January 8, 1918, he again appeared before Congress, telling of the purpose of the allies and that Germany must accept the peace outlined by him.

Wilson named 14 peace terms which became famous the world over. Germany accepted them October 6, 1918.

Germany signed the armistice which became effective on the 11th hour of the 11th day of the 11th month of 1918; and on that day Wilson went before Congress, where he had read the terms of the armistice, and announced the cessation of hostilities.

Then Wilson returned to his study to work on the peace problem. He named America's peace commissioners and on December 4 left for France, arriving at Brest nine days later. He met with the peace delegates and also visited in England, Belgium and Italy.

He made many addresses emphasizing his views of democracy and outlining his plan for the League of Nations he was championing.

In the peace conference Wilson was one of the so-called "big four," the others being Clemenceau of France, Lloyd George of England and Orlando of Italy.

He left France February 16 with the announcement that he expected to return for the peace deliberations later. Upon his arrival home he delivered an address in Boston, February 23, and a few days later he spoke in New York, on his position in the peace conference and the League of Nations.

Tackles Home Problems. The threatened industrial unrest and other domestic problems faced the president at the White House. He disposed of a great amount of business before his return to France, March 5.

Difficulties arising at the peace conference kept the president longer abroad than he had expected, but he returned with the signed document, leaving France, July 1 and arriving here July 8.

Republican senators had prepared an attack on the League of Nations and there also was a huge amount of domestic issues facing him. He disposed of the latter first. After he had placed before the Senate, July 10, the peace treaty, he began a fight on the ever-increasing cost of living.

Tours Country. He then began a tour of the country, championing the League of Nations. The furious pace at which he had been working began to tell on him. His voice broke in a speech he was delivering on the Pacific coast. A few days later he collapsed and was hurried east under the care of his personal physician, Admiral Grayson. He arrived home September 30.

The seriousness of his illness was kept from the public for some days, but gradually the news leaked out that there was danger he might not recover.

For days he lay seriously ill and bulletins were issued from the White House. After many weeks Wilson was able to resume, in a small way, his duties as president, and to take short motor rides as an aid to recuperation. But he never again occupied the room in the executive offices, carrying on his work in his study in the White House.

There he was under the constantly watchful eyes of Mrs. Wilson, a nurse and his physician, Rear Admiral Grayson. During this period the government was administered almost exclusively through his cabinet aides, or through Secretary Tumulty, to whom he communicated his decisions. Only affairs of most pressing importance were permitted to come before him.

Five months after being taken ill he presided at a session of his cabinet. During Wilson's illness Congress rejected the League of Nations.

James M. Cox carried the League issue into the 1920 presidential campaign, only to be defeated by Warren G. Harding, for the presidency.

Following this, Wilson made no further attempt to have Congress ratify the peace treaty or the league. He started his preparations to move from the White House, purchasing a home in Washington for $150,000 and announcing he would devote himself to writing.

Cedid Office to Harding. On inauguration day, March 4, 1921, he executed a Presidential order, Harding from the White House to the Capitol, where the latter was to take the oath of office. He did not wait for the inaugural ceremonies, but was driven directly to his new home, a private citizen once more.

Here he spent the next years in quiet seclusion, fighting in overquiet seclusion to overcome the partial paralysis of his left side. In good weather he went almost daily for an afternoon automobile ride, always accompanied by Mrs. Wilson. Once each week, during the winters, he indulged his liking for vaudeville by attending the performances at a local theater.

But the condition of his health prevented him from engaging on the active writing career he had planned. His interest in current affairs was unabated, and he was kept informed by Mrs. Wilson, who read much to him. He received few callers, however, and only discussed political and other affairs privately with a few close friends.

Plends for Spirituality. It was more than two years after he retired from the White House before his first article, as an ex-president, was published. This appeared in the Atlantic Monthly for August, 1923, under the title "The Road Away From Revolution." In it he revealed his continuing close study of world events, and pleaded for a world spiritual revival as a foundation for re-selecting peace and prosperity.

"The real ground for the universal unrest," he wrote, "lies deep at the sources of the spiritual life of our time and leads to revolution. Our civilization cannot survive materially unless it be redeemed spiritually."

Aside from glimpses caught on his frequent rides or at his visits at the theatre, the public saw little of the War President. His public appearances were few. He participated in the ceremonies attending the burial of the Unknown Soldier at Arlington on November 11, 1921, and—against the advice of his physician—made the procession which escorted the body of President Harding from the White House to the Capitol August 8, 1923.

Kept Courage to End. His home in 8 street, Washington, however, became a Mecca for loyal admirers and sympathizers who each year on his birthday, Dec. 28, gathered by the thousands to pay their respects. On these occasions Wilson, assisted by his negro attendant or by Mrs. Wilson, always appeared in the doorway, leaning on his cane, to express his appreciation.

He attempted no long speeches, as neither his strength nor his voice permitted. On these occasions the throngs saw a haggard, crippled old man, his face lined and drawn, his left arm and leg almost helpless, but with a still keen mind and steadfast will overcoming by sheer courage and determination the handicap of his affliction.

This courage and determination, this fighting spirit which made him the most-loved and most-hated man of his time, he carried to the last.

THE POISONED GIRL

BEGIN HERE TODAY

A novelist, seeking nocturnal adventure, finds a girl in evening dress in Grosvenor Square, London. The girl informs him that she has taken poison and wants to die. To all his pleadings she answers "Go away." He asks a strange man to help him take the girl to Middlesex Hospital.

On the way to the hospital the girl fights to jump from the cab. Calling at the hospital early the next morning he finds the girl conscious and is assured of her recovery by the nurse in charge.

The girl says she is Lady Grace Tarnac of 216 Grosvenor Square and that her father is the Marquis of Grosvenor. She says she has quarreled with her lover, Carlo Scarlati, and is hysterical and rushed to the door of Madame Bordat.

She received me with perfect calm; asking if I wanted a second lesson the same day. In a few mangled sentences I stated the object of my journey. She listened to me intently. Her silence frightened me, for it was essential to produce her in person; otherwise Lady Grace would never believe. Still, I waited, and she began to ask questions.

"You want me to return to him, to Monsieur Scarlati?"
"Yes. You see you are his wife."
"After a long, meditative pause, Madame Bordat said: 'But I don't like him.'"

"No more do I, but since you're married to him, that doesn't matter." "Quite so," said Madame Bordat. "Once more she gave herself over to meditations which I did not like to interrupt. At last they took form: 'How much does my husband earn?' she asked. 'It must be something considerable.'"

"Oh, I hardly know. I hear that on his last American tour, he made over fifty thousand dollars in two months."

Madame Bordat got up solemnly, and said: "I wonder if I have been unjust. Perhaps you are right. I will let bygones be bygones and return to my husband's tour, as it is moved by an afterthought, she said: 'You will understand, Monsieur, that I am relying on your word. You tell me that you have a message from my husband, but you do not bring even a letter from him. You ask me to take an expensive journey to England. I think the journey should be paid for.'"

"Oh, of course," I said. "Also," Madame Scarlati went on obstinately, "he ought to send me some money to show that he is in earnest. He has treated me very badly. He must know he means this."

"How much?"
"I don't know. Perhaps 5000 francs."

"I'll wire this minute, and you'll have the money tomorrow morning."

I found myself strangely popular in Lord Grosvenor's house. Indeed I found the situation slightly altered. Scarlati called daily and was allowed the society of Lady Grace, but she seemed to find equal pleasure in mine. Her attitude was touching; by degrees I became her familiar friend, and she liked to talk of her past and joys to come. With Scarlati it was different; he used to take me into corners, ravel his hair, beg me to say how long this was going on, what was going to happen, and when I would produce his wife. I was malicious enough to refuse information. As for the marquis, he was pathetic; he confided to me that his daughter must be crazy, and so persistently asked me whether I couldn't do something to stop it that I became suspicious. Indeed, one evening, when I had dined there alone, he drank three or four glasses of port, looked upon me benevolently, and remarked: 'Ah, if only this hadn't happened! She might have married an Englishman.'

In other words, my position was unsatisfactory. I was confronting the girl I loved, and who insisted upon being grateful, a man to whom I was doing a good turn, and who was most ungrateful; a father who was hinting to me that I should do something I dared do nothing. The wedding was fixed for six weeks hence; pleasurable excitement was stirring in the breast of only one player in the comedy.

Perhaps, however, Lady Grace was not as happy as she ought to have been at such a season. She seemed preoccupied. Now and then I found her eyes resting upon me with a peculiar expression. When we were alone she would occasionally heave a sigh. Once she even remarked that it would have been better if I had let her die in Grosvenor Square.

"But why?" I asked. "Haven't you got your heart's desire?"
"I suppose so," she replied.

Nothing more was said, but our companionship grew more continuous, more intimate, more confident. This was assisted by the fact that Lady Grace played tennis and golf with ferocity, while Scarlati played the piano. Meanwhile, in spite of letters and telegrams, Madame Scarlati was making difficulties, suggesting that Scarlati should come to her. It took me some time to realize that the key to her heart was made of gold: I made Scarlati promise her 500 pounds on arrival; she fixed her journey so as to arrive on the eve of the wedding.

My tender friendship with Lady Grace developed day by day. But I was not prepared for a fact which I put down to natural excitement; on the eve of the wedding Lady Grace burst into tears, and rushed away from me, refusing to speak. This was just before dinner, but she recovered as women do. Later on, as it was a soft night, I saw her with Scarlati make for the terrace which overlooks the grounds of the Grosvenor House. I do not suppose he enjoyed it, since he knew what was going to happen.

Flu Left Mrs. Abbot In Dangerous Condition

"Yes, indeed, I am a staunch friend of Tanlac," declared Mrs. Rena Abbot, 6129 Section Ave., Cincinnati, Ohio, recently.
"In 1918, I had the flu so bad that for a time I was unconscious. It left my entire system out of kilter; so weak I could hardly walk across the room and so dry I had to catch hold of a chair to keep from falling. Nervousness kept me from sleeping right, sourness, nausea, heartburn and palpitation made my meals so distressing I was hardly eating anything and I lost weight steadily."

"It was astonishing the way Tanlac relieved my troubles and built me up. I started eating so heartily that I gained twenty-one pounds, my nerves quieted down so I could sleep well, and my strength and energy increased wonderfully. Tanlac meant health and happiness to me and I will praise it always. My husband was greatly benefited by Tanlac too."
"Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold."

Miss Dolly Wise

She is here to answer any and all questions concerning love, matrimony, troubles, woes, etiquette, etc. Inquiries should be addressed to Miss Dolly Wise, care The Daily Times, Portsmouth, Ohio.

Dear Dolly—I am a married woman with five children and I have a husband who doesn't amount to a German mark. Dolly, he is just simply crazy about the women. The more paint she has on her face and lips the better he likes her. He has a machine and he makes it a point to pick up women going back and forth down street. Any woman that will ride with him, he will pick up. Dolly, he does not contribute anything towards the support of his family. Once in a while he will bring home a small piece of bacon or a sack of flour, but that does not go very far when there are seven hungry people to feed three times a day. If the table isn't loaded down with food he bawls me out. Now, Dolly, people tell me I am his wife "in name only," and I was just wondering what to do about it. If it wasn't for the disgrace I would leave him, and let him have his wild over women—especially with a man like that? He has a soft job, and money in the bank along with an automobile, and I have to work and clean house for people to make a living for myself and children.

—GREEN EYES.

I would make him support his family or go to jail. That would take some of the conceit out of him, and would not be any more of a disgrace than what he is doing now.

You made a mistake when you started to work. Since your husband is well, and able to work and support his family, there is no excuse for you working outside your home, especially when you have five children who need your constant attention. Just deliver your ultimatum this very night, and tell him he will have to change his ways or go to jail. You may have to act like a "wild woman" for the time being to show him that you mean business, but you can do it if you want to. While you are at it, you might as well tell the bushy-bodies who are carrying stories to you about your husband to mind their own business. You can find out all you want to know yourself, and what you don't know won't hurt you.

Dear Dolly—Will you please print a recipe for beef stew?

—TIMES READER.

Baked Beef Stew—Cut some beef in thin slices. Pound it as for a pie, season well with pepper, salt, butter and some onion chopped fine. dredge with flour, put in a pudding dish, fill the dish with sliced potatoes; add water, bake an hour or more, according to the size of the dish. Some sweet herbs may be added in place of the onion if preferred.

Dear Miss Wise—A time for all things! Read Ecclesiastes, third chapter. Be sure to trim the grapes in February, new moon. To make your kraut, pickled beans, always have brine in the new of the moon, and it will not go dry. To reset flowers, trees, anything that grows on top of the ground, set out in the new of the moon. Kill meat in the new of the moon. In the full of the moon, all that grows in the ground should be planted. Beets, onions, radishes, potatoes, and all that grows in the ground should be planted in the full of the moon. Plant cucumbers when the sign is in the twins, and they will grow double. Above are observations of a life time. For the past 75 years, I have farmed, and know the truth of these statements.

—T. J. BASHAM.

While your advice is timely, I fear the readers of this department will have forgotten all about it, before it is time to make sauer kraut or pickled beans or even plant anything.

Dear Dolly—A man came around to my house the other day enlarging pictures in water colors and I gave him pictures of my four children, but I forgot to tell him what color to make their hair and eyes and I am afraid they won't be the right color when he brings them back. Dolly, I don't know who the man is or where he has his office. If he sees this I hope he comes around for the information. I forgot to give him.

—WORRIED WOMAN.

This should be a lesson to you and other women not to give anything to agents they know nothing about. Why didn't you get his name and address and life's history before you gave him your pictures? You should have had a signed contract about the amount you were to pay for the pictures, as he can charge you any price when he comes back, if he ever comes back.

Dear Dolly—What are the duties of the supervisors in the public schools of this city?

—A TAXPAYER.

I would rather you would ask Superintendent Appel to answer this question. Phone 150.

SOCIAL NEWS

The New Century Club held a delightful meeting Friday afternoon in the K. of P. Hall. Fifty members were in attendance. The club endorsed the movement for an Industrial Farm for Federal women prisoners; a Reformatory for young men, first offenders; and the development of adequate employment for every Federal prisoner, such resolution to be submitted to Congress. Mrs. John Ives was chairman of the program, which was given as follows:

ADVENTURES OF THE TWINS

By Olive Roberts Barton

A BUZZY RIDDLE

Buzz! Buzz! That's what he does.

The Twins guessed this riddle right away. See if you can:

"Buzz! Buzz! That's what he does, like a hungry mosquito at night, feasts by the hour on blossom and flowers."

"Sipping rose-wine with all of his might."

"Hum! Hum! Does he never get done? My goodness! He's dreadfully busy. I just can't see the use of so much blossom juice. Indigestion will make him quite dizzy!"

"Zing! Zing! What a queer way to sing! Darning this way and now darning that! Did he get the wrong flower? Perhaps it was sour. Well, that's good for folk who are fat."

"Like prosperous people he wears a rich cloak. Of velvet striped yellow and black. But instead of gold money, he carries gold honey. Not a pocketbookful—but a sack."

Now he's making a dive for his house (called a hive). Do you think that he's ill? It's a question!

I don't know, I can't say, but it's likely he may Just be taking a pill for digestion!"

"My goodness!" cried the Riddle Lady. "How many halves do you think this piece of bread has? But there! I have an idea. Nancy, you and Nick and the Pieman and Baker-man can fix up a party. We'll have a real party and plenty of bread and honey and cakes for everybody."

JACK DAW'S ADVENTURES — THE CAVE OF THE WINDS

Shortly Jack heard a wee voice say, "Now look at the sailing vessel again." And, as Jack looked, the great white sails started to fill out. Finally, when all the sails were puffing hard, the great boat started to move. Then Jack realized the West Wind had furnished the breeze needed.

Down the river went the great boat and West Wind suddenly appeared at Jack's side again. "I have left several of my little fresh breezes out there and they will keep the ship moving," he said. And, at that moment Jack's hat blew off and went sailing into the air.

As the little adventurer started after it, with flip at his heels, he heard West Wind laugh again. "I did that," shouted the little fluff fellow, "and now I'll let your hat fall to the ground so you can get it. And, sure enough, Jack's hat settled down to the ground. (Continued.)

Wellston Man Dies While Fighting Fire

WELLSTON, O., Feb. 4.—Charles Davidson, for 20 years a prominent merchant of this city, died suddenly in a field on his farm near Alice while out fighting a fire in a meadow. Mr. Davidson was 64 years old and had been suffering for some time from heart failure. He was burning dry grass in the field near his home when the blaze got beyond his control. His wife came out to help him, and soon after he left her to go across the field. Mrs. Davidson noticed the shepherd dog standing on the bank and from its actions she knew something was wrong. Running to the dog, she noticed her husband lying prostrate with the grass burning around him. When she reached him he was dead. His hair was burned, as was his moustache, while his hat, gloves and clothes were also scorched. Doubtless, excitement and exertion in fighting the fire had caused a sudden attack. Mr. Davidson came to Wellston in 1903 and formed a partnership with his brother-in-law Charles Dupre in the grocery business. Later he withdrew and entered into business with Ira J. Quickle. Falling health caused him to go back to his farm.

WOMAN ROUTS THIEF WITH POKER

IRONTON, Feb. 3.—Mrs. James W. Campbell of 324 Monroe street, between Third and Fourth streets, was attacked in her home early Saturday night by an unknown thief, who choked her almost into unconsciousness. Fighting him off desperately with a poker which she had picked up as she stepped into the kitchen of her home when she heard a noise, she doubtless saved her life, but she sustained injuries about her throat. "The Foley's Honey and Tar Compound is fine. My little girl had a bad cough. I got a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and gave her a few doses and she was greatly relieved. I think if any one ever used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound they would never be without it. If you want rest at night, especially where there are children, keep Foley's Honey and Tar Compound on hand."

Never Be Without It

Coughing at night is unpleasant enough to the person suffering from a cold and annoying to those who are kept awake by it. But what is worse is a child coughing. That is both unpleasant and alarming.

Clyde H. Benson of Marlboro, Virginia, writes:

"The Foley's Honey and Tar Compound is fine. My little girl had a bad cough. I got a bottle of Foley's Honey and Tar Compound and gave her a few doses and she was greatly relieved. I think if any one ever used Foley's Honey and Tar Compound they would never be without it. Woman Grilled About Child's Death

SALEM, N. J., Feb. 4.—After a grilling by County Prosecutor Beckley today, Mrs. Bessie Atkinson, mother of six year old Mary Atkinson, whose body was found in a well under the kitchen floor of her home at Woodston last Wednesday, contradicted her previous assertions and said her husband, Robert, had placed the body there after the child had died from a fright when he scolded her, according to Beckley.

Beckley said the woman said the child collapsed after the scolding a week ago Wednesday and never recovered.

FOREIGN COMMENT ON PASSING OF WILSON

CANADIAN
Premier MacKenzie King, of Canada, at the moment, adversaries and friends will dispute whether he will bear the shadow of the crown of martyrdom but the light of history will surely assign him the crown. Considering limitations he will be numbered among those who have given their lives for the creed they held and the policies they sought to make prevail.

Sir Robert Borden, Canada's wartime premier, "The world has lost the service of a great man. Strength and sincerity of his high ideals and great purposes will give him a distinguished place in the forefront of statesmen of this century. Splendid courage and remarkable tenacity characterized his attitude on every question or principle."

"We are again reminded that the majority of the German people were persuaded to lay down their arms because of their faith in Mr. Wilson's promise that there would be no victor and no vanquished and that peace would be concluded on that basis. The name of Woodrow Wilson is closely interwoven with our foreign relations and destinies. We can only promulgate foreign policies as a defenseless and unarmed people and must devote our efforts to resisting the charge that we are morally responsible for the war."

FRENCH

Andre Tardieu in the Echo National—"The people of France will not forget that if Woodrow Wilson might have been mistaken in certain political aspects of the peace, he gave his whole mind, soul and will to the war. He fell fighting on the battlefield of peace for these ideas of collaboration to which the short-sighted egoists who put the world where it now is have persisted in turning their backs. France, after honoring him, became unjustly severe to him. When time shall have struck a just mean our country will remember that this great associate in the war was deprived of office for having wished to remain our associate in peace." L. Oeuvre says—"No man ever, after raising such high hopes, finally caused such deep disappointment."

CHILEAN

All the Chilean newspapers devote many columns of space to the death of ex-President Wilson and comment extensively upon his life and achievements. The general trend of the comment is that Latin-America will never cease to treasure the memory of the late president as a great man who embodied the best ideals of the most progressive people in the world.

ITALIAN

Italian newspaper comments on the death of ex-President Wilson is savored somewhat by the animosities lingering from the controversy over Fiume and the Adriatic problem in general. In concluding its comment, however, the Giornale d'Italia says—"Beyond the funeral pyre hatreds cease to exist, as the ancient proverb says. Today, therefore, since Fiume is rejoined to Italy and our dissensions with the Jugo-Slavs are happily resolved, we too can forget our bitterness, recalling the decisive value of the entrance of the United States in the war."

MRS. LOUISE VIRTUE

Settlement, Ohio
You say, "Why am I always sick?" You perhaps have tried so many remedies without any results whatever; you also have read of this great remedy, Ka-di-ok, and in your own mind have doubted its merits. Why? Simply because other medicines have failed. Naturally this was also added to your list of failures. But there is hope for you if you will have faith in Ka-di-ok and give it a trial to convince yourself of its merits. For instance:

Mrs. Louise Virtue, who has lived in Settlement, Ohio for the past twenty years, residing at 721 Washington street, said:

"I suffered with kidney trouble for several years; had pains across my back continually and my rest was disturbed several times every night. I also had rheumatism in my hands and limbs. I did dressmaking and sewing for a great many years, but had to stop working as my fingers became too stiff for me to continue. I tried all kinds of remedies, but nothing helped me very much until I took Ka-di-ok. After a few weeks' time my condition shows a wonderful improvement. Ka-di-ok has relieved my kidney trouble and I am now doing dressmaking again and any other work that I have to take care of."

"Ka-di-ok is worth its weight in gold and I am glad to recommend it." Ka-di-ok can be obtained in Portsmouth at Fisher and Sirech Drug Store—advertisement.

Donahay Sends

Ohio's Sympathy

COLUMBUS, O., February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—Governor Donahay today sent the following telegram to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson:

"The state of Ohio gave you husband its loyal support at the elections and otherwise during the many trials of his magnificent administration. And now in the solemn hour of death, the people of our state bow in heavy grief over the loss of the beloved patriot and statesman, Woodrow Wilson."

Arrange To Pay

Changed Every Hour

WASHINGTON, February 4.—Hanging on the big door of the home in which Woodrow Wilson spent his last days is a streamer of fresh yellow jonquills, mignonne and forget-me-nots with a yellow crepe sash and a green fern background, the whole bound around with a metallic ribbon.

Each hour these flowers, a sign of death within, are taken down and fresh ones put in their place.

Norway Wins

CHAMONIX, Feb. 4.—Norway carried off first honors in the 1924 Olympic winter sports. The official number of points tallied by the winner will not be known until late tonight and perhaps not until tomorrow as the ski jury must figure out the intricate system of point allowance. However, with four men placed in the first six in the distance ski jump and a like number in the combined race there is no possible chance of Norway losing. It is only a question of how many points they may finish ahead of Finland, their nearest competitor.

ABOUT WHISKERS, NICKNAMES AND FATAL DAYS—INTERESTING PRESIDENTIAL FACTS AND SIDELIGHTS

SIX presidents of the United States have died in office. Three have been assassinated—Abraham Lincoln, James A. Garfield, and William McKinley. Three died of natural causes—William Henry Harrison, Zachary Taylor, and Warren G. Harding.

They were the 9th, the 12th, the 15th, the 20th, the 25th and the 29th of the presidential line. Figures of Grover Cleveland as one, instead of two as in most records, it will be noted that death struck with startling regularity at every fourth man to hold the executive seat since 1844, with the single exception of the interval between the deaths of Harrison and Taylor. By a likewise strange coincidence, Har-risson died in 1840, Lincoln in 1860, Garfield in 1880, McKinley in 1900 and Harding in 1920—each 20 years apart—were stricken down in office.

As another coincidence, consider Monday, Thursday and Friday as the fatal inauguration days for the presidents who died in office. Taylor and Lincoln were inaugurated on Monday, Garfield and McKinley on Thursday, and Harding on Friday.

Other presidents have been inducted into the presidential office on Monday, Thursday and Friday. Rutherford B. Hayes and Benjamin Harrison were inaugurated on Monday, Washington, Grant and Taft were sworn in on Thursday. John Quincy Adams and Franklin Pierce became president on Friday.

Inauguration on Sunday. Woodrow Wilson was the only president to be inaugurated on Sunday. It was at the commencement of his second term and during the critical period of the war, ended at noon on March 4. It was Sunday and rather than leave the national technically without a chief executive for a single day he took the oath of office at the White House on Sunday afternoon, March 4, 1917. Washington, Monroe, Pierce and Hayes were born on Friday. Tyler, Polk and Pierce died on Friday. Lincoln and McKinley were shot on Friday. As another coincidence, Harding, who died in office, was born on Friday. Taylor, Garfield and Harding were each born in November. Harrison and Lincoln were born in February.

McKinley, born on January 29, 1823, came close to it. Thomas Jefferson was the first president to be inaugurated in Washington. George Washington took the oath in New York City, then the national capital. Delay in inauguration arrangements and the difficulty of travel from Mount Vernon, brought the inauguration to the nation's capital. The administration of the presidential oath arrived, it was found that no Bible had been provided and one had to be borrowed from the Masonic Temple across the way.

President Garfield's first act after taking the presidential oath was to kiss his mother.

John Quincy Adams, sixth president, was the son of John Adams, second president. William Henry Harrison, ninth president, was the grandfather of Benjamin Harrison, twenty-third president. William Henry Harrison was the eighth and Benjamin the tenth generation from Pocahontas and John Rolfe.

Smooth Shaven Till Lincoln. John Adams and Thomas Jefferson both died on the same day, July 4, 1826. Monroe died on July 4, 1831. After leaving the presidency, John Quincy Adams and Andrew Johnson returned to Congress. Both died in office. President Tyler died while a representative for Virginia in the Confederate Congress.

Until the time of President Lincoln, all presidents had been smooth shaven. Lincoln averred that the pressure of civil war duties did not give him time to shave. Grant was the first president to wear a mustache. James Buchanan and Grover Cleveland were bearded when they were elevated to the presidency, but Cleveland married a resident of the White House. President Wilson's first wife died in the White House and his second marriage took place there.

Of the 45 states, only ten have supplied presidents. Eight were born in Virginia, seven in Ohio, three each in New York and North Carolina, two each in New Jersey, Massachusetts and Vermont, and one each in New Hampshire, Pennsylvania and Kentucky. Lincoln, born in Kentucky and elected a resident of Illinois, was our most "western" president. All of the six presidents born in Ohio were elected since 1880.

William Henry Harrison was the oldest man elected to the presidency. He was 67. Roosevelt was the youngest. He was 43. Grant was six months older than Roosevelt. Grant was christened Hiram Ulysses, but changed it to Ulysses Simpson. Cleveland's full Christian name was Stephen Grover; Woodward Wilson's first name was Thomas, but he never used it.

Jefferson given "Cold Shoulder." Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Polk, Pierce and Harding never had any children. President Tyler had 14, eight boys and six girls.

Since the days of the blunt old John Adams, gripsack in hand, who "slept" out of the White House in the early morning dawn of March 4, 1801, to avoid extending his hated rival, Thomas Jefferson, the hospitalities of the executive mansion, there has been no break in this formality extended to the new presidents, unless there be a special personal misunderstanding, which arose between President Johnson and General Grant which made their intercourse a rigid formality.

Presidents of the United States are technically immune from arrest. But a colored policeman "pinched" President Grant for the fast driving of his team in Washington. Grant put up $20 as a bond for his appearance on the charge and forfeited it the next day. He complimented the policeman on his adherence to the performance of his duty.

Wilson, As President, Burdened By Tasks And Problems As Great, If Not Greater, Than Any Executive In The History Of The Nation

One of the "war Presidents" of the United States, burdened by problems and tasks as great, if not greater, than those borne by Washington and Lincoln, Wilson is still too vivid in the public mind to assure them of a complete appraisal. A decade or two hence, perhaps, the world will fix upon this great American his estimate of his eight years' service as the chief magistrate of the republic, a task which cost him $18,000,000,000, nearly half a million of men and almost inexhaustible war material, to end the deadlock between the Allies and the Central Powers and bring Germany to defeat in the historic struggle of 1914-1918.

Abandons Isolation. It was under Woodrow Wilson's leadership that the United States abandoned its policy of isolation and became an active participant in world affairs. The republic underwent a national metamorphosis. Mr. Wilson, nicknamed "the schoolmaster in politics," formerly head of Princeton University, was the first Democrat since Andrew Jackson to serve two terms as president.

He began smashing precedents almost immediately after his induction into office by delivering his address in person before congress and finished by going to Europe to attend the peace conference. He was abroad twice, first in December, 1918, and again in March, 1919. At times he was the most isolated and the most bitterly assailed president since Abraham Lincoln. Friends extolled him as "the peace-maker of the world," enemies declared he had thrown to the winds "Washington's warning to beware of 'entangling alliances' with foreign powers."

Begin Tour. The war over and the Treaty of Versailles, which he personally had helped to draft in Paris, signed by "the Big Four"—Clemenceau, Lloyd George, Orlando and Wilson—the president returned from France to begin a few months later on September 8, 1919, a 10,000-mile speaking tour of the United States in behalf of the League of Nations covenant, which was part of the treaty.

A conservative Senate threatened and did block its ratification. During 26 days of almost constant travel he delivered speeches aggregating 160,000 words.

Working his way East from the Pacific coast, he had planned to make many more addresses in behalf of the League but reaching Wichita, Kansas, suffered a physical collapse which caused him regretfully to abandon his tour.

At times during the following eighteen months, he was desperately ill and had recovered only sufficient to go as late as March 4, 1921, to company Warren G. Harding, his successor, to the capitol for participation in part of the inauguration ceremony. Previous to this he had made only one public appearance in all that time, on June 10, 1920, and there were many alarming rumors regarding the state of his health.

Relieved of the cares of office, Mr. Wilson's convalescence was more rapid and although he did not regain entirely his one-time robust health, he was able to engage in the partnership with Bainbridge Colby, his former Secretary of State. The former president and Mrs. Wilson resided there in a beautiful home which they purchased for $150,000 some months before his retirement. Before leaving the White House, however, he was the recipient of a signal honor.

Awarded Noble Prize. The Nobel Prize was awarded to Mr. Wilson "as the person who has promoted most or best the fraternity of nations and the abolishment of standing armies and the formation and increase of peace congresses." In accepting it, President Wilson wrote on December 11, 1920: "The cause of peace and the cause of truth are of one family. Even as those who love science and devote their lives to physics or chemistry, even as those who create new and higher ideals for mankind in literature, even so with those who love peace, there is no limit set. Whatever has been accomplished in the past is petty compared to the glory of the promise of the future."

While President Wilson had frequent differences of opinion with the members of his cabinet, there were only two or three falling out during the entire eight years of his administration. Before his first inauguration he had come to the parting of the ways with the late William E. McCombs and with Col. George Harvey, two "original Wilson men" both of whom had worked for his nomination and election.

McCombs, who had been chairman of the Democratic National Conference, declined Wilson's offer of an ambassadorship to France and wrote a book shortly before his death in which he charged the president with bad faith and gross ingratitude and severely criticized McAdoo, Bryan and other associates of Wilson. Col. Harvey as early as 1904 had referred to Wilson's availability as a presidential candidate. When in 1912, as editor of Harper's Weekly, after consistently booming Wilson, he asked him whether he thought the support of his paper was injurious to his political prospects because of a charge then current that Harvey was controlled by a Wall Street banking firm, the candidate bluntly said: "I do." In spite of Wilson's efforts to heal the breach he had caused by his own admitted "factious" candor, Harvey discontinued his support and their friendship ceased. Colonel Harvey in 1921 was appointed ambassador to England by President Harding.

The Wilson cabinet changes, notably few, were started in 1915 when William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, opposed to the president's handling of his warning notes to Germany, resigned. A year later, Lindley M. Garrison, Secretary of War, resigned because of the result of a quarrel over differences of opinion with the president over the need for preparedness, Garrison maintaining that the country's military strength was inadequate. Bryan was succeeded by Robert Lansing and Garrison by Newton D. Baker, former Mayor of Cleveland Ohio. In 1920, Lansing made his last appearance in the White House, following a statement by the President that Lansing's views on important international questions were opposed to his own.

Books Appear. A veritable library on Wilson, the peace conference and similar subjects appeared soon after the president's return to civil life. Notable among these were volumes by Mr. Lansing, Col. Edward M. House, the president's confidential adviser and Joseph P. Tumulty, his press secretary. Lansing's book dealt largely with the president's alleged blundering in the peace conference and his reputed subservience to Lloyd George and Clemenceau, the premiers of England and France.

A. C. Gardiner, a famous British character analyst, in an appraisal of Wilson's personality after his death, called him "a moralist in politics" and said that many of his troubles came from his "rigorous and unyielding habit of mind" and his inability to "manage men."

"A little slackening of the moral resin," wrote Mr. Gardiner, "with the ening of the public will, the spirit of fun which irradiates his private life would have based his path enormously and, perhaps, probably changed the course of history. Wilson is widely different from Lincoln who used inferior men with a noble magnanimity even while he knew they were disloyal to him. Hence the sense of aloofness of Wilson from the popular mind, his air of the recluse, his reputation of the inaccessible autocrat. Behind his play of fancy dwells the spirit of the Scotch Covenanter. He thinks hard, he thinks straight, he thinks hard, and he is not afraid to act."

Three Opening Periods characterized Woodrow Wilson's entrance into public life. Elected president of Princeton University in 1902, the country at that time obtained its first glimpse of him as a national figure. This was accentuated by what has been called "the University in which student cliques were abolished and the sons of rich and poor men were encouraged to fraternize. Eight years later, in 1910, he was elected Governor of New Jersey.

Governor Wilson's administration was notable chiefly for his advocacy of progressive legislation. Political opponents charged him with radicalism. "The Seven Sisters" law, a series of seven bills drafted at his recommendation, were passed after a legislative contest. They forbade the incorporation of trusts, New Jersey within the commonwealth, having been used as a rendezvous for monopolists.

The nomination of Governor Wilson to the Presidency by the National Democratic Convention in June, 1912, at Baltimore, after a long deadlock, was one of the most dramatic episodes in American political history. Then followed his election to 425 votes in the Electoral College to 85 for Colonel Roosevelt and 8 for Mr. Taft who had been renominated by the Republican party to succeed himself.

During President Wilson's two terms there occurred a world upheaval such as had never before been witnessed since the dawn of time. Empires crumbled and thrones collapsed. The map of Europe was torn to shreds. China, that ancient monarchy, had already become a republic and with the ending of the world war Russian Czarism had been hurled in the dust. German militarism was crushed. Austria-Hungary dismembered and Turkey driven out of the Holy Land.

Two days after announcing in Congress his decision to go to Europe to attend the peace conference on December 4, 1918, he sailed for France with Mrs. Wilson aboard the steamship Mrs. Wilson aboard the leaving New York and one of the greatest demonstrations ever accorded an American citizen. He arrived at Brest on December 13 and upon reaching Paris took up his residence in the mansion of the Prince Murat as a guest of the nation. Following the big public reception upon his arrival in the French capital which lasted four days, the President conferred with Premier Clemenceau, Colonel House and Herbert Hoover, who was later designated as Director General of Allied Relief in Europe. In all in his mission of mercy abroad, the people of Paris presented Mr. Wilson with the city's "great gold medal," and gave Mrs. Wilson a diamond and enamel brooch. Later the President and his wife visited the Kings and Queens of England, Italy and Belgium.

Acclaimed in Paris. Upon his trip to Paris, Mr. Wilson was everywhere acclaimed as "the friend of humanity" and "the man who had come to put an end to all wars." No monarch of ancient times was ever accorded greater admiration or listened to with greater respect from his lips. He was acclaimed as a practical idealist, the representative of a mighty new land, whose people were altruistic and unselfish and who desired to see the devastated world restored to sanity and happiness.

Before his departure, in an address to Congress, he repeated his famous "14 points" which, he said, constituted America's interest in the forthcoming Council at Versailles. Presentation of these "points" one of which provided for the League of Nations covenant, precipitated bitter controversy in Congress which lasted for many months. It engaged such opposition to the President's plans that upon his return to Europe on the second stage of his mission, he was less cordially received. Especially was this the case in certain parts of Italy where, because of his attitude on Rome, his name was hissed. French newspapers also excoriated him and he was denounced by a London newspaper as an "autocrat."

At home he was criticized for assenting to the Shantung decision and for alleged failure to "stand up" to secret diplomacy. Senator Poincaré, in a speech, accused him of being "the worst man" in America because of his leniency toward radical doctrines. Other critics accused him of gross extravagance abroad and said he had accepted almost priceless gifts.

President Wilson's participation in the Peace Conference was placid, it is said, except for occasional ripples that disturbed his usual calm. Tension at times was reported between him and Clemenceau and Lloyd George, Premier of Australia. The latter, at one stage of the negotiations, quitting the conference and returning to Rome with his colleagues because of his attitude on the Adriatic question.

Answer to Italy. In answer to Italy's claim for Fiume, he was quoted as having ironically told Orlando: "I am sorry I cannot give you New York." The president's stand on "self-determination for small nations" encouraged national aspirations in Ireland, Korea, Egypt and other countries allegiant to certain of the Allied powers. The Russian catastrophe and affairs on the Mexican border also added to the president's grave problems.

The treaty with Germany was signed on June 28, 1919, by the president and other representatives of the "Big Four," and shortly after Mr. Wilson sailed for New York. Before his departure from Brest he expressed his satisfaction with the settlement arrived at in Paris. Then followed his nationwide tour and its abrupt termination.

Native of Virginia. Born in Staunton, Va., December 28, 1856, of Scotch-Irish parentage and christened Thomas Woodrow Wilson, the future president was known as "Tommy" until he graduated from Princeton in 1879 and was thereafter known only as Woodrow Wilson. His father, the Rev. Joseph Hughes Wilson, a prominent Presbyterian minister, moved to Augusta, Ga., when Woodrow was two years old. Later the family went to Columbia, S. C., and then to New York. Wilson, at the age of 17, entered Davidson College, leaving soon to go to Princeton. Upon graduating he studied law in the University of Virginia and in 1882 began the practice of law in Atlanta, Ga.

While in Atlanta and at Augusta, he became engaged to Miss Ellen Louisa Axson, daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman of Savannah, Ga. The young lawyer's clients were few and he soon abandoned a legal career. For two years after he was a student at Johns Hopkins University and while there published his first book, "Congressional Government," a study of American government. It won recognition both in the United States and abroad and is believed to have been influential in enrolling officers of professors from Bryn Mawr College and Wesleyan University. He married Miss Axson on June 27, 1885.

He became successively professor of history and political economy at Bryn Mawr and at Wesleyan. Outlines and later professor of jurisprudence and political economy at Princeton where, subsequently, he was made head of that institution. Meanwhile, Professor Wilson, as a writer, gained high reputation as a writer. Some of his works, with the date of their publication, were as follows: "The State—Elements of Historical and Practical Politics," (1885); "Division and Reunion," (1891); "George Washington," (1896); "The History of the American People," (1902); "Constitutional Government in the United States," (1903); "The New Freedom," (1913); "When a Man Comes to Himself," (1915); "On Being Human," (1916); "An Old Master and Other Political Essays," and "Mere Literature and Other Essays," were among his earlier writings. His state papers, notes to Belgium, to Congress, and his addresses to Congress, would fill many volumes.

The honorary degree of Doctor of Laws was bestowed upon him by Lake Forest College (1887); Tulane University (1893); Johns Hopkins University (1893); Brown University (1902); Harvard University (1907); Williams College (1908); Yale made him a Doctor of Literature in 1901.

Personal Pen Picture. In an intimate pen picture of the president, drawn by himself before the National Press Club in Washington, Mr. Wilson once said: "When I think of the number of men who are looking to me as the representative of a party, with the hope for all varieties of salvage from the things they are struggling with, in the midst of it, it makes me tremble. It makes me tremble with a sense of my own inadequacy and weakness and if I seem to myself to be to make any colossal blunders."

A curious fact of Mr. Wilson's career was that when a young man he wrote an article under the name of "Thomas W. Wilson," in which he deprecated the tendency toward autocracy in American Presidents. This was in 1879. Thirty years after, on the floor of the United States Senate, Lorenzo T. Shorham, Republican Senator from Illinois, avowedly assailed Mr. Wilson as an "autocrat" and offered a resolution declaring his office vacant. The resolution was killed.

Princeton, with its great oaks, its shaded lawns and historic hall, furnished the setting in which Mr. Wilson did much of the literary work which later commanded the attention of the world. His family life was ideal and serene. Surrounded by his wife and three daughters—Margaret, Jessie and Eleanor—the fierce controversy which raged over the preservation of democratic ideals at the University disturbed him but little.

Heretofore he had not been regarded as a politician. Indeed, it had commonly been reported that the president of Princeton, never a wealthy man, was contemplating retirement upon a teacher's pension in 1900. In September of that year he was elected by the Democrats for Governor of New Jersey. Elected the following November he served until March, 1913, when he resigned to take up his duties at Washington.

The policy of the new administration was outlined in one of the briefest inaugural addresses ever made to Congress. Among other innovations, Mr. Wilson announced a policy of "plutocracy" and, until May, 1916, gave semi-weekly audiences to the Washington newspaper correspondents. He said the White House would be "wide open" but correspondents were not seen by him during the war.

Urges Neutrality. When the European conflict burst upon the world in all its fury, President Wilson in an address to his fellow countrymen counseled them to be strictly neutral. Exacting every effort to avert the drawing of the United States into the mad storm, for nearly three years he drew upon himself the bitterest criticism of some of his staunchest friends. About this time, speaking of the example of America in regard to peace, he said:

"There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as a nation being so right that it does not need to convince others by force that it is right."

Popular resentment against peace at any price was rising in America. Fighting Europe ridiculed Mr. Wilson's policy but later accepted his explanation of his attitude that he was maintaining for delay, that the United States was not prepared to take a big part in the struggle, that the nation was not united for war by reasons of its diverse population and divided sentiment.

A fragile moment in the president's life came when, sitting at the bedside of his dying wife, he penned a message to the European powers suggesting a peaceful settlement. Mrs. Wilson died on August 6, 1914, and the president took her body to her childhood home in Home, Georgia, for burial. The family circle had been broken only a short time previously by the marriage of two of the president's daughters, Jessie and Eleanor, one to Francis Bowes Sayre and the other to William G. McAdoo, then Secretary of the Treasury. Mrs. Wilson's death left the President alone except for his eldest daughter, Margaret, who was absent much of the time in world work.

Grief Stricken. Mrs. Wilson's death plunged the president into deep personal grief. With it came the anxiety of guiding the country aright in a world at war. To add to his perplexities, the practices of the German government, particularly in submarine warfare, were repulsive to men of honesty and honor. He found it hard to believe that the innumerable atrocities charged against U-boat commanders could be attributed to the orders of the German government but his disallowment finally came after the most prolonged exchange of notes and warnings.

On May 7, 1915, the great steamship Lusitania, was torpedoed and sank off the coast of Ireland with the loss of 1,600 lives, more than 110 of them American and many women and children. There was a widespread clamor in the United States for war.

Ship after ship had been sent to the bottom without warning and this climax came with the sinking of the Lusitania. The English Channel steamer Sussex, The President in a final note, served notice on the German emperor that he might expect war with the United States if the "inhuman and illegal" practices continued. His warning to Germany that she would be held to a strict accountability, and his later declaration that America would use "force without limit," stirred responsive chords in the hearts of most Americans.

President Wilson accordingly broke off diplomatic relations with the Berlin government and gave Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, his passports. Everyone knew it meant war, that the conflict was close at hand.

Meanwhile a happy domestic event in the president's life served to lighten the burden of his official cares. He was married to Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt, the widow of a Washington merchant, who immediately became his constant companion and confidante.

Turnall at Home. Internal affairs in the United States early in 1917 were in a state of restlessness verging on turmoil. Enemy propagandists were busy night and day. The increasing cost of living was of grave concern to wage earners. Scores of strikes in industrial plants and on railroads were fomented by Austro-German plotters financed by Count von Bernstorff and aided of Dr. Constantin Theodore Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, who had been sent back to Vienna.

The United States never had been a military nation. Her regular army establishment of 100,000 men seemed pitifully weak when England and France were sending millions of fighters to the battle line. President Wilson at once urged the passage of a Constitution Bill by Congress by which men from 21 to 31 were to be drawn by lot. It was called the "Selective Service Act" and, based upon the experience of the other Allied nations, was intended to raise an army without demoralizing essential trade and industry. The law was enacted after an exciting but short debate in both Houses on April 28, 1917, just three weeks after the United States declared herself to be in "a state of war with Germany." Subsequently similar legislation was issued against Austria.

A Big Achievement. Draft machinery was put in motion and, despite the derision of the German General Staff, "the most remarkable achievement in the history of all warfare," according to General Peyton C. March, the American chief of staff, was accomplished. Training camps were located throughout the country and within a year nearly 2,000,000 armed and equipped soldiers were landed in England and France. A second draft, registering men from 18 to 21 and from 21 to 45 was ordered to bring America's fighting force in Europe up to 4,850,000 men, but few of these were called as the Central Powers shortly after collapsed.

Meanwhile the United States Navy had been greatly augmented and on November 11, 1918, when the armistice was signed, she had 335 warships and 70,000 enlisted men in service abroad.

The president was largely instrumental in organizing during this period the Emergency Fleet Corporation, the War Industries Board, and the Food and Fuel Administration and other war bodies all of which came in for a great deal of criticism. One of these, the Aircraft Production Division was accused of gross irregularities, extravagance and delay. It was charged that more than $650,000,000, which had been appropriated by Congress for this department had been practically wasted. The president designated former Judge Hughes to investigate the allegations, some of which were sustained with the observation that "there is no law to punish men for inefficiency." It was found, however, that no one was criminally culpable.

Not the least important of other war measures adopted at the behest of Mr. Wilson was the Federalization of the railroads, cables, telephones and telegraph systems and the plan for the upbuilding by the government itself of a great American merchant marine. For the last named purpose alone Congress appropriated the sum of $2,500,000,000. Later these public utilities were returned to private control.

WORDS OF WILSON THAT WILL ECHO DOWN TIME'S CORRIDORS:

There is no such thing as a man being too proud to fight. The world must be made safe for democracy.

We must be impartial in thought as well as action. A steadfast concert for peace can never be maintained except by a partnership of democratic nations.

There is no hate in our hearts for the German people. We have always said that we were the servants and friends of mankind. Peace must be planted on the trusted foundations of political liberty.

Man Accused of Passing Bad Check Here Caught In Dayton
A telegram received by Chief of Police Rome Arthur, Sunday, from Dayton police told of the arrest of Charles E. Day, who also has the name of Harry B. Davis, in his journey about the country. The man is wanted here on an alleged forged check, a warrant for his arrest having been forwarded to Dayton recently by the local police.

It is charged that Day or Davis cashed a $100 worthless check at the Washington hotel about December 10 after a short stay at the hotel. According to the police he worked a slick scheme, sending himself a letter to the hotel a day or two before he arrived.

He would then ask for his mail, after registering and would open the letter to the desk disclosing a check which he would immediately have cashed. The check used was an engraved one on a Fairmount, W. Va., firm which went out of business several years ago. This was learned when the check was returned and marked "no good."

Lives of eight persons were imperiled Sunday afternoon when a Maxwell touring car owned and driven by B. B. Ison, of 647 Front street, left the road just east of the Wizard Oil bridge near Wheelersburg Sunday afternoon and turned over into a ditch. He was accompanied by his wife and two children, Opal and Burl and Mr. and Mrs. P. M. Leach and two children, Linnie and James. The top of the machine was badly damaged, the windshield was broken and a fender crumpled.

Pay Tribute To Woodrow Wilson

Expressions of regret over the death of Woodrow Wilson were possible for any man to act in those hard days in Portsmouth, when he was president, hearing his passing a number of citizens expressed themselves as follows Monday:

Ex-Mayor Gableman: I have read today with a heavy heart the wonderful and beautiful tributes to Woodrow Wilson by the great men of the nation. Americans, are those of our Americans.

Woodrow Wilson subscribed to the doctrine that faithful public service is the most honorable of life's activities. The history of this great American as a public servant is and will be for all time an inspiration in those holding positions of public trust who fight for principles they know to be right.

I am firmly convinced that time will justify the acts and reward the noble and unselfish effort of a public servant. For it was the noble and unselfish effort of Woodrow Wilson that cost him his life.

Adam Frick: Woodrow Wilson, 28th President, confronted the most serious crisis in the nation's history toward civilization. Then in executive control of America, believing as he did that it is true that man's greatest inherent rights lie in his freedom and that such rights should not at any time invade the rights of others, he found it necessary to carry these principles over three thousand miles of sea and implant them in the hearts and minds of others.

That these might also enjoy freedom to the messengers in delivering this ultimatum through the youth of America. But that civilization may again resume its course toward the highest ideals of Christian life it was so ordained even though these messengers would find it necessary, in delivering this ultimatum, to pursue peace with the nation's desire.

In passing, Woodrow Wilson has covered the earth with the seed out of which will arise international conditions in harmony with the impulses of the hearts and minds of Woodrow Wilson sense the right. So Woodrow Wilson will grace the lives of history and leave to the youth of nobler and higher motives.

Henry Bannop: Only once did I see Woodrow Wilson. It was when he stopped in Columbus to deliver his first address on the trip that proved so disastrous to him. He was returning to the train from the hall where he had spoken. Due to a street car strike, there were but few people on the street. From airplanes, lazily flying overhead, flowers were being scattered. There were soldiers and martial music. I stood close to the carriage as he and Mrs. Wilson drove by. What impressed me was that he looked so tired and worn; so very, very tired. I felt sorry for him and my sympathy went out to him. This was so because I knew he was paying the penalty exacted by as arduous toil as ever beset a human being. Whether those things were for the best or whether he strove in vain, time alone can tell. He did his duty as he saw his duty and spent his life for it. Woodrow Wilson was a thorough scholar, a great statesman, and a President who will ever live in the history of America.

John B. Jones: We lost one of our greatest presidents in the death of Woodrow Wilson. His deeds will linger long with those who realized his greatness and his sincerity of purpose.

Si Straus: The nation can ill afford to lose one of the culture and brains of Woodrow Wilson. His death is an irreparable loss to the United States.

George E. Krickler: I am a great admirer of Woodrow Wilson. In my estimation he was more "sinned against than sinning" in the flood of bitter criticism that was poured out against him. I believe that he acted honestly in everything that he

Tenth District Republicans Are Aroused Over Election

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4.—Factional conflict among Tenth District Republicans again has broken out, according to reports made to Republican State Chairman Charles W. Montgomery today. Mr. Montgomery expressed his personal opinion on the matter, but has been unable to settle the trouble.

The difficulty grows out of the attempt to pick delegates to run for the Republican organization and State Central Committee, of Lawrence county, called a district meeting at Jackson February 5. It was asserted the call was for a meeting of district organizations to name two delegates, two alternates, a State Central Committee member to succeed Hannan and one presidential elector.

Charges, however, have been made that the call was not regular in that the distribution of voting papers was not equitable. Under Hannan's call, Athens county will have six delegates at the Jackson meeting and the other five counties, four each. As Vinton casts a comparatively small Republican vote, and Lawrence county casts a large vote, Lawrence county men objected to the apportionment.

BOND BETWEEN WILSON AND GRAYSON CLOSE; MOST INTIMATE FRIENDS

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—(By the Associated Press)—Many friends and confidants came into Woodrow Wilson's life after he entered the White House. Many also passed out. Of all those who came, two notably remained to his dying moment.

One was his physician, Rear Admiral Cary T. Grayson, the other, was Bernard H. Baruch, the New York financier and counselor on the intricacies of the post-war problems. Of the two, Mr. Wilson's relationship with Dr. Grayson were the more personal, the bond between them was almost as a feeling between father and son. Mr. Wilson's friendship for Mr. Baruch, although personal also, was sustained on the foundation of two minds that ran along together on common causes.

Grayson, the confidant and friend of two presidents before Wilson, brought to his chief touches of nature, which many declared were not part of Mr. Wilson's natural equipment. Nevertheless, it was a profound respect for those attributes which grew into close friendship and companionship.

Brought Conception of Nature

Dr. Grayson was the son of a Virginia country doctor, orphaned early in life, who took his hard knocks while getting an education. From his father and from experience he probably inherited the innately human conceptions of nature itself, as only the old style country doctor acquires them, and these he brought to Woodrow Wilson.

The public mind most associates this physician, about whom it has heard so much, with the illness and death of Mr. Wilson. But long before Woodrow Wilson even was heard of as a presidential possibility, Dr. Grayson was a naval officer attached to the White House as a physician to President Roosevelt. Because he knew something about human nature, birds, trees and animals, particularly horses, he was not long in becoming Colonel Roosevelt's aide and companion. There were other aides to be sure, but this young Virginia doctor, most even to the point of being shy, soft spoken and intensely loyal in his convictions and friendships, was the one President Roosevelt picked out when he wanted a companion for some exciting horseback ride or something strenuous.

Dr. Grayson Made The Ride

The American people were thrilled when President Roosevelt just to show some army officers that he asked of no one something he himself would not do, made his famous ninety-mile horseback ride from Washington to Warrenton and back in a cold, sleety rain that froze as it fell. Nobody mentioned that Dr. Grayson rode every foot of the way at his chief's side and sometimes guided the president's horse when his spectacles were coated with ice.

President Roosevelt turned Grayson over to President Wilson, said he recommended for loyalty and he won Mrs. Taft's heart with his sympathetic devotion to her delicate health.

Woodrow Wilson had never heard of Cary T. Grayson when he stepped into the White House on March 4, 1913. On that day came "a tide in the affairs of men, which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune."

Grayson Was On The Job

Several physicians of the army and navy, including Grayson, were attached to the White House. Inauguration Day, with its splendor and attraction, lured all of them but one from their post. Dr. Grayson elected to remain on duty. The first Mrs. Wilson, as she stepped through the White House portals in her first moments as its mistress, met with an unfortunate but painful accident. There was a call for a doctor, answered immediately by Grayson.

Mrs. Wilson commended to her husband this modest young man, who seemed so devoted to duty. He became Mr. Wilson's aide and physician, and as the years went on, his friend. No political wires were pulled, no influence figured in the disposition of one of the most coveted posts in Washington.

"Take Good Care Of Woodrow!"

A little more than a year later, one hot August afternoon, with the world war bursting into flame, the first Mrs. Wilson lay on her death bed. Her last words to Grayson were: "Take good care of Woodrow. Promise!"

How well that promise was kept, probably only a recording angel may now know.

Some time after Mrs. Wilson's death, Dr. Grayson introduced to Miss Helen Woodrow Bones, President Wilson's housewoman and guest at the White House, a friend of long acquaintance. Mrs. Edith Bolling Galt. Miss Bones took her into the small, white House circle where Mr. Wilson met her. The lady later became Mrs. Woodrow Wilson.

Some time after that, President Wilson, on recommendation of Secretary Daniels of the navy department, nominated Dr. Grayson for promotion to the grade of Rear Admiral. The real truth of the matter was that in a conversation with Mr. Daniels before her death, the first Mrs. Wilson asked the secretary of the navy to give to her husband's physician and aide some rank commensurate with his responsibility, and to insure his attachment to the White House against any routine demands in changing a new set of officers. Grayson never knew he had been nominated for promotion until he read it in the newspapers. There was opposition, somewhat like that which attended President Roosevelt's promotion of General Wood. It so softened Grayson's modesty that later when he had an opportunity to become surgeon general of the navy, he declined it.

Devoted Some Years to Wilson

Probably no one will ever know what the complexities and difficulties of his position as physician, friend and confidant of Woodrow Wilson really were. One thing is certain. He devoted seven years of his life to keeping Woodrow Wilson a well man and four more to keeping him alive.

The late Dr. S. Weir Mitchell, of Philadelphia, had declared that Mr. Wilson never would serve out a first term in the White House. Grayson fought the first warnings of an insidious malady with a regime of relaxation, open air and exercise, and won. Later, when Mr. Wilson suffered his first stroke of paralysis after the return from his League of Nations speaking trip in 1919, Grayson of all the physicians called for consultation. He said he could prolong the patient's life. He did, more than four years, and lost his fight only when as Mr. Wilson himself said: "The old machine has broken down."

When Mr. Wilson went abroad to the peace conference he was not only Mr. Wilson's physician, but he was his eyes and ears—his intelligence officer. Many European statesmen wonder where Mr. Wilson learned the intimate things he really came into possession of through his quiet, modest doctor.

Grayson Could Tell Many Things

Other persons who professed to wonder why they fell into presidential disfavors could learn the reasons why, could they induce Grayson to divulge some things Woodrow Wilson confided to him. Many things about which historians will wonder could be cleared up if Grayson would tell—but he won't.

From the time Mr. Wilson fell ill in the west in 1919, and a few days later suffered the stroke which eventually led to his death, Dr. Grayson looked after him as he would a child. He had children, and a man who was commonly regarded as cold and almost incapable of affection and companionship responded as he would to a child. The whole story of course, will never be told. Only a few people who have known Woodrow Wilson claim to have known Woodrow Wilson as he would have tended one of his children, and a man who was commonly regarded as cold and almost incapable of affection and companionship responded as he would to a child. THIS IS NIGHT OF ALL STAR BOXING SHOW; FINE CARD ARRANGED

Two Man Bouts

Feature of Card

This is the night of the all-star boxing show in Brushart Hall, Sixth and Chillicothe streets, and judging from the interest being taken in the various bouts the card will be witnessed by a large crowd. The first prelim starts at 8:30.

Now, fistfully speaking, comes Babe Reeves to uphold the honor of Olway in the squared circle. He will fight four rounds with Kid Brown of Portsmouth in the curtain raiser of the big boxing show to be staged under the supervision of the Sportsman's Athletic Club. Reports are that Babe is a right and left hander and his fellow townsman are threatening to turn out to a man to root for him in his fistful debut.

Act number two on the card will be a six round, go-between "Zip" Valentine, the fistful of Portsmouth, and Doc Price. This is sure to be a good one for both boys have a purpose in view. Doc wants to show the fans that he is ready for a final company and "Zip" wants to redeem himself from the sting of that first blow to the land of nod on his first appearance here.

The semi-final will see two of the best colored welters in this section in action—Young Farmer of Dayton and Jimmy Blackburn of Charleston, W. Va. This is scheduled for eight rounds, but it is doubtful if it will last that long as both boys are give and take boxers.

It is hard to tell which section of the double main go will be the real event of the evening, but it is certain that the "bugs" will see snappy action and plenty of it in the ten rounds that Shifty Dando and Billy Thorpe, the flying aviator of Dayton, are slated to go. "Bad News" Taylor of Pittsburgh and Eddie Grant of Dayton are two of the

Deny Collins Rumor

CHICAGO, Feb. 4.—A denial that any new bids have been received for Eddie Collins, star second baseman of the Chicago Americans, has been made by President Comiskey and Secretary Grabner of the club. Both stated that stories printed in the east that Washington and the New York Americans had made offers for Collins were without foundation.

Four Reds Unsigned

CINCINNATI, O., Feb. 4.—Pete Donohue, Jackie May, Ed Roush and Sammy Bohne are the only regulars of the Cincinnati National League team who have not signed their league contracts for the coming season. May has not been heard from since he was purchased from the Vernon club. None of these players are regarded as hold-overs, however, and are expected to sign up in time to start south with the club four weeks from today.

Five Wolverines To Leave College

ANN ARBOR, MICH., February 4.—Five men who have been named on Walter Camp's first, second and third all-American teams will leave the University of Michigan at the completion of their student work this year.

The men are: Ernie Vick and Jack Blott, first team centers; Harry Kipke, first team halfback; Angus Goetz, second team tackle, and Irvin Uteritz, third team quarterback.

Vick and Uteritz are the first to go, receiving their degrees at the end of the present semester. These men are the only students on the campus "owned" by major league baseball clubs. Vick is the property of the St. Louis Nationals, and has received orders to report to the Cardinals' spring training camp at Bradenton, Fla. Uteritz is owned by the Boston Americans and is expected to play with an Eastern club during the coming season.

Kipke and Blott expect to graduate in June. Goetz, who was named all-American in 1920, will complete his internship at the University Hospital this year. Kipke is the only one of the five participating in sport at present, although both he and Blott expect to play baseball with the U. of M. nine in the Conference race this year.

PLAYER-WRITERS BARRED

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—The United States Lawn Tennis Association at its annual meeting today decided by an overwhelming vote to declare tennis player-writers ineligible for amateur competition after January 1, 1925. The formal vote which gave the executive committee of the U. S. L. T. power to interpret the amateur rule as barring player-writers, was 47,196 to 6,250.

Regret Good, Bad And Indifferent Eggs Were Hurling At Ironton Team

ASHLAND, KY., Feb. 4.—The culprits hurling eggs at the members of the Ironton basketball team following a game at Ashland several weeks ago, will be brought to justice for their deeds if measures taken by the Ashland basketball team materialize.

The following is a copy of the letter written to the Board of Education by members of the Tomcat team petitioning them to aid in finding the person or persons implicated:

"We the members of the boys' basketball team of Ashland High School, deploring the fact that some of the members of the Ironton High School were thrown at with eggs upon leaving our high school, after the Ironton-Ashland basketball game on the night of January 27, and feeling that it is a stigma upon the good name of our school and team petition you to aid us in wiping out this disgrace by taking such steps as seem necessary in order to bring the real offenders to justice and freeing us from any connection in the matter."

American Hockey Team Loses To Canadians

CHAMONIX, Feb. 4.—With only fifty more points to be divided in the Olympic winter sports competition, the American hockey team was the favorite for first honors. The Norwegian athletes have gathered a total of 91 1-2 points to 78 1-2 for the Finlanders, their nearest competitors, and were conceded to have the best chance in the remaining 81 events today.

Great Britain has taken third place, displacing Austria by virtue of winning seven points in the hockey, while the United States remains fourth with 26 points. Austria is fifth with 23.

That our satin slippers are made of Skinner's Satin, which is the best to be had and they also know that for these slippers they paid seven dollars. I have about 75 pairs in several lots that I'm going to close out and as long as they last will sell for four-ninety-five. For the woman who wants a dandy pair of dressy slippers, here is her golden opportunity. Better not wait until your size has been sold.

"OAKLAND CRESCENT"

The City's Most Beautiful and Exclusive Residential Addition is Now Being Offered FOR SALE

This new addition, just east of Sunrise, connecting Sunrise avenue and Kinney's Lane is laid out with a long winding street of Crescent formation, upon the east side of which are beautiful terraced lots, with large level lots on the west, ranging from forty to one hundred and twenty-three front footage, and upon which some of the city's most beautiful homes will be erected.

Each and every home to be erected in this addition will be of individual design, and while we shall endeavor to construct these homes so that we may be able to sell them at a price that will be within the reach of every prospective purchaser of the better class of homes, we shall allow no item that would add to the comfort or beauty of the home to be overlooked. No two homes of the same design will be erected within this addition, as it shall be our idea to give each of our purchasers a home of individual design incorporating every item that would add to the individual's convenience.

While this new addition is to be a strictly PEEBLES DEVELOPMENT, we are perfectly willing to erect a home conforming to the ideas of the purchaser and shall gladly co-operate in working out every item and detail that will add to the purchaser's individual requirements.

To the prospective home purchaser, who has an idea of what they desire in a home, we would suggest that they get in touch with us immediately and permit us to show them what we are offering in this new addition, and allow us to give them figures on the erection of their new home. We are in position to finance the erection of this home from start to finish, and upon its completion make arrangements for you to obtain possession on very liberal terms.

We wish it to be understood that by calling us to go over this proposition with you, will not obligate you in any way whatever to buy. If we cannot satisfy you we do not expect to sell you and shall not annoy you by insisting that we sell you something you do not want. If we can satisfy you in every detail, we are ready to begin construction of your new home and complete it for you as early as possible.

We have a very limited number of lots to offer in this new addition, and in view of the interest which has already been shown, we would advise that those who are interested in a proposition of this kind, get in touch with us at once. There will be many disappointments after we have disposed of all of the lots in this beautiful new addition.

WOODROW WILSON

IN the chambers of the dead, in the temple of fame, no less than in the house of our Heavenly Father, there are indeed, "many mansions," many stages, many degrees. Each human soul that is gifted above its fellows, leaves, as it passes out of the world, a light of its own that no other soul, whether more or less greatly gifted, could give equally. As each lofty peak in some mountain is illuminated with a different hue of its own, by the setting sun, so, also, each of the higher summits of human society is lit up by the sunset of life with a different color, derived, it may be, from the materials of which it is composed, or from the relative position which it occupies, but each, to those who can discern it rightly, conveying a new and separate lesson of truth, of duty, of wisdom, and of hope.

Sunday, as the wires brought the news of the passing of America's most shining victim of the great world war, the above paragraph in the oration delivered by Dean Stanley, October 20, 1885, following the burial of Lord Palmerston, kept running through our mind, and how truly does it fit any review of the life and work of Woodrow Wilson. His place in history is secure. He will grow in stature in the estimation of men as the years pass, and the "light from his soul" will grow in radiance as men grow into recognition of the loftiness of his ideals; the strength of character that made him stand by his conception of right though the majority for the moment disagreed; the honesty of his heart and his conscience; the beautiful simplicity of his faith in his own people, a faith that never wavered, though partisan rancor and political expediency poured upon his head a torrent of abuse and calumny.

The name of Woodrow Wilson will stand in history alongside of those of the greatest written there. For purity of motive and loftiness of purpose, it will yield position to none.

Mr. Wilson's record of achievement is too fresh in the minds of people to require detailed reviewing here. He came into American political life from the halls of a great university, preaching a doctrine of honesty, of efficiency, of idealism in public life. After a brief experience in the governor's chair of New Jersey, he was called to the presidency of the United States on the eve of the world war, God's chosen instrument, it seemed, to lead His people through the dark days that "tried the souls of men." The wisdom of President Wilson's leadership in war is not questioned, and it is doubtful indeed if any other man in public life would have acquitted himself one-half so well. The war over Mr. Wilson endeavored to force upon a world, not ready, the idealism of a nature that visioned the nations of the earth dwelling together in peace and harmony, banishing forever war and thoughts of war. Only partially successful against the skepticism and chicanery of the imperialistic diplomats of Europe, he came home to encounter such a storm of abuse and misrepresentation as it seldom has been the lot of man to endure. Undaunted, confident in the justice of his cause, he attempted to stem the tide of hostile criticism. His physical strength, undermined by the strain of war burdens, was unequal to the task. And so, he fell in harness, as truly a victim of the war as if he had been shot down in battle.

No more fitting conclusion could be made, it seems to us, than by quoting these words of Blaine, when in his eulogy on Garfield, he alluded to the storm of detraction that beset Garfield from the day of his nomination. Spoken of Garfield, they fittingly describe Wilson:

"No might nor greatness in mortality
Can censure 'scape; backsliding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?"

"Under it all he was calm, strong and confident, never lost his self-possession, did no unwise act, spoke no hasty or ill-considered word. Indeed nothing in his whole life is more remarkable or more creditable than his bearing through these months of vituperation—a prolonged agony of trial to a sensitive man, a constant and cruel draft upon the powers of moral endurance. The great mass of these unjust imputations passed unnoticed, and with the general debris of the campaign passed into oblivion. But in a few instances the iron entered his soul and he died with the injury unforgotten, if not unforgiven."

NEW YORK DAY-BY-DAY

BY O. O. MCINTYRE

NEW YORK, Feb. 4.—A page from the diary of a modern Samuel Pepys: Early up and to see Roy Howard, lately cut for an appendix, and Lord, how medicinal odors of a hospital undo me. Thence to my bank to find I am almost bankrupt, which is a great pity.

Yet I would liefer be completely out of funds than worry with a few paltry pounds, so merrily to the jeweler's where I bought my wife a poor wreath, a gold parasol, but what she will put in it I know not at all.

Across from the library I was nearly struck down by a woman driving a gasoline wagon and she stopped and backed up to make excuses and hit a vendor's push cart, knocking his wares helter-skelter.

To dinner at Castle Gate with Peter B. Kyne, John McFarlan, and some other, and then to see Louise Grody in a music play, also very sweet but the play poor stuff. Afterward for a beaker of hot chocolate and to talk awhile with Blind George, the newsdealer, and so to bed.

It would probably never happen in a small town, but it happens in a city of five—or is it six—millions. A friend went to an employment agency to engage a butler. This was at four o'clock. He found the man he wanted, agreed on salary and asked him to report at his home that evening. At five o'clock the employer received a note by messenger from the butler regretting he could not report. He said he had broken his arm in a fall. At 6:30 the employer drove in from his suburban home to have dinner with a friend in New York. When the door was opened the butler he had employed a few hours earlier greeted him. The employer was so excited he shook hands with him.

A sweet young thing tripped out of a Fifth Avenue shop to a taxi that stood at the curb with opened door. "I'm engaged," said the chauffeur. "Isn't that fine," said the lady stepping inside. "I hope you will be mighty happy."

Then, too, there is the story of the Fifth Avenue bus conductor who had slowed up for a Japanese gentleman who hailed him but seemed disinclined to hurry.

"Come on, Mah Jong, get a move on you," yelled the conductor.

There is the clatter and bang of an old fight play in the Harlem apartment house courts in the early morning. Harlem is largely peopled with workers—clerks, small shopkeepers and skilled workmen. They are far removed from the sun dogs. At sun up the courtyards are vibrating with alarm clock bells. There is the rattle of frying skillets.

Abbe Martin

Who recalls when we had a break a couple of eggs in a pair of wet boots before we could get 'em on? "If she comes in tonight I'll try to catch her in the morning" and tell her," said Mrs. Tipton Reed, who somebody left a message for her daughter.

Copyright National Newspaper Service

Windows that reveal heads in curious papers. Now and then the startled cry of a baby. There are the delightful odors of fried onions, steak, coffee, griddle cakes and bacon. Dogs are yipping their morning greetings. Elevator bells buzz and now and then phono-graphs add to the conglomerate noise. It is all a happy medley—the noise of workers starting out to conquer another day. After nine o'clock in the summer time the mothers take chairs out to the sidewalks and enjoy a little neighborhood gossip. Baby carriages fill the sidewalk. Children start their hop-scotch and other pavement games. It is all a pleasant cross-section of a happy life where real people live.

Another interesting institution in Harlem is the cheese shops. The little shop windows are temptingly decorated—Roquefort, Stilton, yellow, white and myriad other displays to delight the eye of the gourmet.

"To tell you the truth, ma'am," confided the man in the dazzling uniform, "if business doesn't get any better, I'm afraid I'll have to make a meal of this ferocious beast."

Substitute Desired

Edgar, the eight-year-old son of the house, was as lacking in sentimentality as the average small boy and was particularly annoyed by the caresses which his feminine relatives insisted on thrusting at him. One night he was sent to bed shortly after the arrival on a call of a distant connection, who, as he was starting to mount the stairs, called:

"Won't you give Cousin Mattie a kiss, dear?"

Thoroughly sickened with the whole sex, Edgar turned appealingly to his father and said:

"Dad, for Heaven's sake kiss this woman, will you?"
